ALEJANDRO BREVITSKY, of the Cuban Ministry of Cultural Affairs, who spoke yesterday at a meeting sponsored by the Latin-American Society.

Bervitsky speaks on Cuba

The Latin American Society yesterday presented Alejandro Bervitsky of the Cuban Ministry of Culture, who spoke to a group of about forty people on the present situation in Cuba. Argentinian by birth, Bervitsky went to Cuba in 1962 on an invitation of the Cuban government and soon after was asked to become a citizen. He accepted the offer because he saw the possibility of contributing to the development of a post-revolutionary Latin American country.

Bervitsky discussed the various conditions in Cuba: for instance, lack of poverty because everyone works, security of employment because workers are never fired from their jobs, elimination of infantile paralysis, and full literacy.

Bervitsky's short speech was followed by a lengthy discussion period. Answering a question, he stated that there had been an appropriation of the means of production, but that there still was privately owned housing. The only houses expropriated were those formerly being rented, he explained.

Commenting on the liberty of artistic creation and the role of the artist in Cuba, he pointed out that it was not good for artists to feel restricted, but he went on to say that Fidel Castro had outlined at a Congress in 1962, his own attitude towards revolutionary art, by saying that creative artists who worked for the Revolution were acceptable to the people of Cuba, but that any counter-revolutionary work was definitely unacceptable. Bervitsky cited as an example the poet who was placed under house arrest because his work was believed to be counter-revolutionary.

When asked about the educational system in Cuba, he commented that education is compulsory up to and including high school. He added that the fervour for learning and education in Cuba means that few people drop out. This could also be because a wide variety of educational opportunities are available in the country: there are universities and also technical schools. With four universities in a small country like Cuba, no student has to travel more than 70 miles to school.

Blood flows on campus

With two days left in its six-day campaign to collect 5000 pints of blood at McGill, Blood Drive has managed to drain 2244 pints from members of the university community.

Monday was Beer Day; free bottles of Heidelberg beer were given to donors to compensate for their losses. Despite the rain, which may have kept people away from the Union, organizers rated the day as a success, with a total of 670 pints donated.

Speaking about the seeming reluctance of people to give blood, one organizer of this year's drive noted that there has been a general decline in donations throughout Quebec in recent

One reason that the Red Cross feels that people are not showing up to volunteer their veins is that they have become, in a sense, "better educated" about giving blood. Most people understand that individuals who have had certain ailments are not permitted to give blood, so they don't show up if they know they have had such an illness.

Another problem, according to the organizers, is that there always seem to be long lineups at certain times of the day, most noticeably, lunch time. Some people, apparently enticed by the offer of a free lunch, show up when they get hungry, causing crowding at the door. Organizers suggest that people who don't like queuing up should arrive between 10 and 12 or between two and six. The clinic will also be open Wednesday night till 9 pm for those who always wait to the last minute.

One thing that doesn't seem to be a problem is the advertising for this year's drive. Some Blood Drive volunteers speculate that there isn't an individual on the campus who is not aware of the clinic going on in the Union.

The Red Cross needs over 800 pints of blood a day to meet the needs of Quebec hospitals. The organizers of this year's Blood Drive urge every person at McGill to give blood.

V.D. research questioned

Questionable medical research incidents that have recently been exposed (for example, the Tuskegee syphilis scandal, the University of Cincinnati total-body radiation case, and the California pesticide studies) are making people more and more suspicious of any research projects involving human subjects.

Mark Zannis and Bob Davis, members of the Friends of the North, are about to publish a book on genocide in the Canadian North, which will include information on one such medical project.

The project will test a new gonorrhea vaccine (developed at the Biologics Control Laboratories in Ottawa) in Inuvik in the Northwest Territories and in Uganda. The choice of testing sites at once gives rise to suspicions. Admittedly, both Inuvik and Uganda are relatively isolated and rife with gonorrhea; but they also contain large non-white populations. Therefore, one questions whether it was solely because these areas are isolated and have a high incidence of the disease that they were selected. The possibility of racism in the choice of sites and the possible resultant genocide loom large.

Other factors reinforce the suspicions. One month after the Inuvik test was announced, Dr. Ralph Persad, chief medical officer of the venereal disease control unit of the Ontario Health Department, disclosed that American researchers in Atlanta had for the first time been able to infect chimpanzees with gonorrhea. (Montreal Gazette, October 14, 1971) The following statement appeared in the same article: "A vaccine against syphilis developed within 10 to 15 years and a vaccine against gonorrhea even sooner."

So while American scientists are still working with animals and talking about a vaccine being several years away, Canadian researchers are ready to experiment on human beings—non-white human beings, that is.

Further information that makes the project even more suspect is contained in the correspondence between Mark Zannis and Dr. Maurice LeClair, Canadian Deputy Minister of Health. Zannis wrote LeClair asking for:

"(1) Any literature which may be used for information purposes for patients and doctors for this trial.

"(2) Data on the previous tests which prove the vaccine to be safe.

"(3) Information as to whether any of this research has been published in any journals, periodicals, etc.

"(4) Information with regard to any previous tests carried out in that area and the controls employed to ensure co-operation and understanding of those tested.

"(5) Information with regard to the apparent difference in the advance of the research of developing a gonorrhea vaccine between the Atlanta project and the one being done in Ottawa and Inuvik.

"(6) Information with regard to the method of selection of prospective patients.

"(7) A comment as to whether these selected patients are to be remunerated."

LeClair sent a very patronizing reply to Zannis, including the following passage:

"... The vaccine in question has been under study for over three years. During this time its safety in experimental animals and in humans has been thoroughly established. ... There are strict protocols which have to be observed in any study dealing with humans, and great care has been taken to ensure that these have been met in the fullest sense. ... The vaccine has, of course, received clearance for the trial by our Food and Drug Directorate. Such clearance is given only after thorough examination by scientists expert in this field. ... I do not consider it necessary, nor would I agree to providing you with all the data that was presented to the above ..."

LeClair added that volunteers for the project will be from "high-risk" groups and that the Committee of Originating Peoples' Entitlement (COPE) has approved the trial and requested an early start.

On the question of published research on the vaccine, LeClair cited two articles. One that he listed was supposed to be in the November 1971 issue of the Bulletin of the World Health Organization. The Bulletin, however, does not publish monthly and does not indicate publication dates on any of its issues (as LeClair should know). There was no article on the subject in either No. 5 or No. 6 of Volume 45 (which were most likely September/October and November/December of 1971), nor was any such article indexed in any of the indexes.

Finally, LeClair said nothing of the information that will be supplied to the subjects in the program, implying that they will be told little or nothing. He also did not supply any data on the previous tests; he did not define what "high-risk" groups are; and he did not comment on the remuneration, if any, involved.

In short, the interests of the patients and medical research subjects have been sacrificed again; and information about medical experimentation on human beings is being kept from the public.

YOU'LL WONDER WHERE YOUR MONEY WENT WHEN YOU LOOK AT STUDENT GOVERNMENT

Last Wednesday's meeting of Students' Council was a travesty and a tragedy. The purpose of the meeting was to consider the budgets of various organizations—from the almost $100,000 for running the Union to the $105.30 for Activities Night. The manner in which Council was asked to consider these items made it almost impossible to make responsible decisions.

To begin with, this was our first opportunity to look at the more than forty budget requests on which we were to act. One reason given for this is that budgets were not ready till the night of the meeting. But many were ready and thus could have been sent to us in advance.

Better explanations for items appearing on budgets are also needed. Unless a Councillor personally knows the inner workings of a particular group, he can usually not decide if a certain category is being allocated too much or even too little money. For example, on the Students' Council budget, the following items appeared:

Subscriptions $150 (voted down by Council)

Legal fees $4000

Adjustments for prior sessions $4000 (an item I still question).

My first reaction was what do these figures mean? Are they realistic? Can they be modified? Longer, written explanations are needed for us to better interpret these budgets. The way they are now given to Council, it might be fair to say of the Councillors, "Forgive them; they know not what they do."

There is also the question of the surplus. The administration has agreed to pay about $40,000 a year towards the cost of lighting and heating the Union. Because this decision is retroactive to last year, the Students' Society has received a $40,000 rebate. Thus, for this year only, the Students' Society has a special $40,000 surplus. Should we spend it all this year, spread it over the next few years, or use it for a special project that will benefit us for years to come?

One suggestion is to use it to pay off part of the large debt we incurred through the McGill Student Housing Loan Fiasco. Paying off more of the debt would do three things: spread the benefits of the surplus over a few years, save a few thousand dollars on interest, and put us in a better bargaining position with the administration for more money through a show of good faith.

Another idea would be to use the surplus for a major renovation or purchase of capital equipment, maybe towards a pub, as many people wish. This method would also spread the benefit over time.

But it appears that the faculties want practically all the surplus to be spent this year on themselves. Most of their proposals so far are for programs that will not be repeated in the future when the bonus is gone. Their short-sighted student leaders have a "look-at-all-the-money-I-got-us" attitude, with no concern for next year.

It seems that there are two main ways to distribute the surplus if we give it all to the faculties this year. One is to let the Students' Council decide on each faculty proposal in terms of how much it serves the general student interest. The other is to divide this money among the various faculties with no questions asked. But on what basis? Clearly, the equitable way would be to make the grants proportional to the size of the faculty. This would probably go against the desires of some representatives from the smaller faculties.

Three faculty requests for Students' Society subsidies were approved at last week's meeting: $1350 to Architecture (154 students), $3700 to Education (1252 students), and $3440 to Management (627 students).

Tomorrow night, Whitney Hardy will move that these resolutions be rescinded, for the following reasons. None of them was considered by the Finance Committee, which puts them in direct contradiction with the Students' Council's Finance Regulations. No financial statements from the previous year (or in some cases even for this year) were presented to put the requests into context. The proportion given per student is so high in some cases that if it were followed as an across-the-board guideline, the money would run out before most requests were considered. And most of all, no comprehensive criteria have yet been adopted.

In conclusion, I would like to show you what the last of these appropriations was. The Management Undergraduate Society produced a budget forecasting revenues of $9700 and expenditures of $13,140, leaving a deficit of $3440, which they wanted the Students' Society to subsidize. Here is the largest component of their proposed expenditures, I quote in full.

Social: Management Week $1800
Banquet 3000
Freshman Reception 600
Xmas Party 400
Grad Dance 1000

Total $6800

Should $3440 of your Students' Society money be spent this way? I don't think so. I had to leave the Council meeting in disgust.
